Stepping Thru Accessible Details

A compilation from the 2010 Americans with Disabilities Act Standards and the 2013 California Building Code

Second Edition

SIA Stepping
Thru Accessibility

by Janis Kent, AIA CASp

Stepping Thru Accessible Details has now been updated and expanded to over 150 pages. The book is a compilation of over 110 architectural details and specifications based on the 2010 ADA Standards with a color-coded overlay of the 2013 California Building Codes, including the sourcing information for both. Since each detail and specification is color-coded for portions that pertain only to California, it is also a valuable tool and resource for all areas of the country that need to comply with the ADA.

The best 'Accessibility Graphic Standards' out on the market. Architects, designers, building officials will have up-to-date ADA and CBC requirements blended into one document with illustrations delineating the requirements and the tools to implement accessible spaces in their buildings.

The most comprehensive and thorough compilation of accessibility information I have encountered in my career as both a building inspector and an accessibility instructor. This book has proven to be an excellent tool for both design professionals and inspectors who deal with accessibility at any level.

Ms Kent's new book is a tremendous asset to those involved in Accessibility in the building industry. It is a wonderful compendium of information assimilating the 2010 ADA with the 2013 CBC including references to all of the source material used in the creation of her details. While she leans this book towards projects located in California, because she color codes items that are California only, it is a valuable resource for projects elsewhere. The details are actually more relevant than the Architectural Graphic Standards, in my opinion, due to the actual integration of accessible solutions where code compliance matters. I highly recommend this reference book for all who review and make decisions for buildings, sites, and facilities!
